that downtown Carbondale is a vital economic environment in which to establish many different kinds of businesses. We are greatly concerned that this projected move on the part of such a prestigious organization as the United States Postal Service from its present building on Main Street will be interpreted by industrial prospects as an indication that downtown Carbondale has had its day.

What can we do to help protect the architectural integrity of the exterior of the present Post Office building in Carbondale? What can we say to industrial prospects who are thinking of establishing themselves in Carbondale to convince them that the United States Postal Service is not abandoning downtown Carbondale, and thereby threatening the precarious economic health of the city of Carbondale?

Sincerely yours,
